

Dasharatha is the King of Ayodhya and has three wives and four sons, Rama Lakshmana, Bharata, and Shatrughana. Rama is the ideal and perfect son and grows up with his brothers. When he comes of age, he marries Sita, the princess of a nearby kingdom. However, Bharata's mother is Kaikeyi, who resents Rama being the crown prince. She calls up a debt that Dasharatha owes her and asks for Rama to be exiled for fourteen years and her son Bharata to be made crown prince instead. The devastated Dasharatha has no choice and Rama prepares to leave for exile. However, Sita and Lakshmana will not leave his side and follow him into the forest. While in the forest, Surpanaka, a female rakshasi (demoness) becomes enamored of Rama and is wounded by Lakshmana while trying to kill Sita. She flees to her brother Khara and asks him to avenge her. However, Rama and Lakshmana defeat Khara and his army, and only one member of their entire army survives. This lone soldier flees to the island kingdom of Lanka and begs Surpanaka's brother, the mighty king Ravana to avenge them. Ravana has heard of Sita's beauty, and he decides to abduct her. Using trickery and magic, he manages to lure Rama and Lakshmana away from Sita and kidnaps her, taking her to Lanka. Rama and Lakshmana travel far and wide searching for Sita but to no avail. Finally, they come upon a band of vanaras, or monkey-men who pledge to help him. The vanaras seek out traces of Sita and find she has been taken to Lanka. Hanuman flies to Lanka and confirms she is imprisoned there. He contacts Sita and informs her of Rama's whereabouts, promising that they will be back to rescue her. Before returning to the mainland, Hanuman sets fire to the whole city of Lanka.

Rama, Lakshmana and the vanaras army build a causeway from the tip of India to Lanka. They travel to Lanka, where an epic battle follows between the armies. Ravana is finally killed by Rama, and Sita is freed. They return to Ayodhya, where Bharata returns the crown to Rama.
